Dr. Georgiana Dobri is a board-certified neuroendocrinologist who specializes in disorders of the pituitary and adrenal glands. She provides expert, compassionate care to patients of the Pituitary Program of the Weill Cornell Medicine Brain and Spine Center, and offers ongoing therapies to post-surgical patients.

Before joining the faculty of Weill Cornell Medicine, Dr. Dobri served as Clinical Assistant Professor of Medicine at Cleveland Clinic Lerner College of Medicine, Case Western Reserve University, and Associate Staff in the Cleveland Clinic Department of Endocrinology and Metabolic Diseases, where she took care of high-complexity patients in her pituitary and adrenal clinics.

TRAINING

Dr. Dobri received her medical degree from Carol Davila University of Medicine and Pharmacy in Bucharest, Romania, and spent three years of endocrinology residency in Romania before completing her internal medicine residency at Cook County Hospital in Chicago. She completed an endocrinology fellowship with emphasis in pituitary and adrenal disorders at the Cleveland Clinic.

RESEARCH

Dr. Dobri's research, publications, and invited talks are concentrated on pituitary and neuroendocrine pathology, like diagnosis of acromegaly and pheochromocytoma and treatment of prolactinoma.
